POSTAL SCHEMES.

The interest which postal savings and postal country, indicates that their establishment as parts of our postal system is but a matter of time. The government is collecting a vast amount of information on the subject of the workings of telegraph companies and postal savings banks in other countries secured through our ministers, and consuls abroad. They agree that the success of both systems has been complete wherever tried. The consus bureau has taken pains to procure accurate information with regard to telograph property in the United States, and will compile the information in the reports from ministers and consuls abroad, and publish that, together with that in reference to the United States in the forthcoming census reports. This information. will be of great use in considering not only the telegraph question but also the subject of establishing postal savings banks.

The chairman of the house postal committee, who is specially interested in the matter, has recently received the last report of the postmaster-general of Great Britain in reference to the workings of the postal-telegraph in that kingdom, He says that the report is most gratifying to the friends of postal telegraphy. It shows that 3,500,000 more messages were . sent during the last fiscal year than during the previous twelve months, and that the aggregate reached during the last fiscal year was nearly 30,000,000 missaages. England paid the enormous sum of $50,000,000 to the telu. graph company ten years ago, when it took possession of the wires; yet the net rewatered stock, which is embraced in this capi- lation of Oregon and Washington never known tal, and with a government service under before. proper restrictions messages might be sent to any part of the United States and territories for 25 cents for ten words, and within a radius of 509 miles for 10 cents for every ten words, and a very handsome profit realized to the govern-

The subject of compulsory retirement of army officers which has been brought before congress by Butterworth's bill, is being agitated among military men all over the county. There is almost a unanimous desire in the army to have a bill pass retiring all officers from active service who have attained the age of sixty-two This feeling is not confined to the younger men in the ranks who will benefit by the law, but is entertained by the older ones, and a petition is entrusted to the president to extend the ap. passage of the bill contained 1,400 names of plication of the law to smaller offices and sub. military men, many of them being men who ordinate positions. > A sharp contest is going on over federal appointments in Florida, Georgia and Mississipil. Under the administration of President NEW Hayes the domecratic senators from those states were accorded the privilege of naming the appointees, in expectation that they would forget their devotion to their party, and become Hayes republicans. The result was however, that the republican party in those states was entirely disorganized—the republicans feeling that they had been sold out. President Arthur, as well as the members of his administration, determined that the federal offices in the states named should be filled with republicans, not democrats, and for this reason declined to accept the recommendations of democratic senators and representatives. In consequence there is a quite a commotion among politicians from these states as to who shall be appointed. The republicans themselves are not united, the republican state committees claiming, on one hand, the right to name the appointees, and the defeated republican candidates for congress maintain, on the other, that their recommendations should be followed. The president has concluded to select for himself the man for the places, and in so doing to take those who will make efficient officers and aid in strengthoning and building up the civil service in the south.

around for Fritz, but perceiving that he had disappeared she covered her face with her hands and sobbed bitterly.

After the violent scone which had in some measure broken his marriage Fritz left the city without knowing where he went. He then entered a public house and called for wine, which he drask with the distraction of a man overwholmed with sorrow. Fritz could never recollect why he had related a part of his misfortune to a companion at the inn. In fact, he never could explain why he had signed a paper which his companion presented to him, why he had spurned the gold he offered him, and above a 1 how he had awakened in the barracks. It is certain that it was with a feeling of deep repugnance that Fritz arrayed himself racks. It is certain that it was with a feeling of deep repugnance that Fritz arrayed himself in military uniform. When the cockade bearing the colors of the prince was given him it was impossible for him to contain his indignation. He tore the cockede in pieces and train-pled it under his feet. Unfortunately this action did not escape the vigilant eye of the corporel, and Fritz was condemned to receive one hundred and fifty lashes. In consequence of this he remained six weeks in the infirmary and henceforth he was distinguished for his At this epoch Fritz's country was at war with France. It is but just to say that, notwishstanding his wrongs and sorrows, he expected each day to receive some intelligence from Catherine, and her silence in this respect only confirmed his conviction of her guilt. Fritz fought with the energy of anger and the courage of desperation. The battle was wholly lost for the pripes and his server. tion. The battle was wholly lost for the prince and his army. The timidity of some of the troops who had run away was a fresh motive to reward the constancy of those who had remained steadfast, and Fritz was appointed

This promotion and this honor were a now source of bitterness to him, because he could only attribute them to the influence of his wife, and he thought that each new honor, the same as the purse of gold, was paid for by her infidelity.

"Alas!" said be, "if I must every day receive a new promotion in this way, where shall stop?"

When he became captain he resolved to leave the service, and it was not without a struggle that he wrote to the prince asking his permission to festign bis office. The resignation was accepted.
